The following was written by Beauchamp in prison on being awakened by a vision of his wife before she joined him.

Daughter of grief thy spirit moves
In every whistling wind that raves
Across my prison grates;
It bids my fainting soul to bear
And with its sister spirits soar
Aloft to heaven's gates.

In visions bright it hovers round
And whispers the delightful sound
"Peace to thy troubled mind"
What though unfeeling worlds unite
To vent on thee their venomed spite,
Thy anna's heart is kind."

And oft when visions thus arouse
Thy husband's fondest hopes he vows
'Tis no delusive dream,
And springing from his bed of grief,
He finds a moment's sweet relief
Though round him darkness gleam.

Still, still when calm reflection reigns
My soul its sweet repose regains
In this triumphant thought
That in thy doom though absent far
My soul has laid in store for her
Of bliss her sweetest draught

Then rave ye angry storms of fate!
And sound your loudest blasts of hate,
Ye perjured reptile worms,
Disdaining aught to yield, my soul
Shall gladly fly this earthly goal,
Safe to my Saviour's arms.

Prisoned in clay— the immortal soul!
Triumphant soars, disdains control,
And mocks a vengeful world;
The shaft is too late, I soar too high,
I rise in triumph to the sky,
Not caring whence 'twas hurled.

Lo, never let the world espy
A tear in thy angelic eye—
Be firm as him you love:
O, wherefore pine to hear my knell?
Has not God ordered all things well?
We'll meet in heaven above!

The following distich was written by Mrs. Beauchamp to be engraved on their tombstone.

Entombed below in others arms
The husband and the wife repose,
Safe from life's never ending storms,
Secure from all their cruel foes.

A child of evil fate she lived—
A villain's wiles her peace had crossed;
The husband of her heart revived
The happiness she wrongful lost.

He heard her tale of matchless woe
And burning for revenge arose;
He laid her base betrayer low
And struck dismay to virtue's foes.

Reader if honor's generous blood
E'er warmed thy heart, here drop a tear;
And let the sympathetic flow
Deep in thy mind its traces wear.

A brother or a sister thou—
Dishonored see thy sister dear;
Then turn and see the villain low,
And here let fall a grateful tear

Daughters of virtue, grant the tear
That love and honor's tomb may claim.
In your defence the husband here
Laid down in youth his life and fame.

His wife disdained a life forlorn
Reft from her heart's beloved lord;
Then, reader, here their fortunes mourn
Who for their love their lifeblood poured.
